

FOR HIP HOLIDAY GIFTS:
SEVEN DAYS online store

Google™ SEARCH 7D

(GO)

SEVEN DAYS
VERMONT'S ALTERNATIVE WEBWEEKLY

NEW ▶ PERSONALS NEW ▶ CLASSIFIEDS ▶ 7D BLOGS

DINING & NIGHTLIFE 7 NIGHTS

/calendar / features / classes / columns / music / food / film / art / letters / store

suggest a story recent <features>

Writes of Passage

Checking out the prose that has influenced the pros

by Ken Picard (12/20/06)...

Season's Greetings

Vermont artists play the card market

by Brooke Hunter (12/20/06)...

Breakfast with Chump

Fiction

by Mary Hays (12/20/06)...

Lust for Lit

Vermont author Anne Stuart offers an edgy read on romance

by Margot Harrison (12/20/06)...

Deconstructing Dovetail

Is a Burlington school program helping, or hurting, socio-economic integration?

by Cathy Resmer (12/13/06)...

Getting In

Giving the grade to the Naturalization Exam

by Mike Martin (12/13/06)...

Viral Adventure

Book review: The End of Polio? by Tim Brookes

by Kevin J. Kelley (12/13/06)...

Map Quest

The great-great-grandson of a Vermont governor gives antique cartography a new twist

by Cathy Resmer (12/13/06)...

A Kinder Court

Chittenden County rethinks its approach to mentally ill offenders

by Ken Picard (12/06/06)...

Of Mummies and Men

<features>

< previous article | next article >

[THEATER]

An Actor Prepared...

Hardwick actor Edgar Davis turns in a powerfully taut performance as Walter Lee Younger by Erik Esckilsen (11/01/06).

Hardwick may be a long, long way from Hollywood, but for the past two years, it's hosted a rare dramatic talent. In the summer of 2005, local resident and actor Edgar Davis wowed Vermont audiences in two Unadilla Theater productions by South African playwright Athol Fugard: Master Harold and the Boys and The Island. More recently, he's come down from the hills to steal another show, as the lead in the current Champlain Theatre at Champlain College production of A Raisin in the Sun. A St. Louis native, Davis draws on acting experience that spans two decades and includes film and stage work from coast to coast.

Davis turns in a powerfully taut performance in Lorraine Hansberry's 1959 masterpiece as Walter Lee Younger, the angry Chicago chauffeur who dreams of investing his deceased father's life insurance payout in a liquor store. Certainly some biographical similarities between actor and character enhance this portrayal. Each is a Midwestern African-American man living in a female-dominated household. Each is roughly middle-aged — Walter Lee is 35, Davis 44. Each occupies a dwelling in need of repairs — the roof of Davis' 1899 Hardwick home leaks, he says. And each has his eye on a bigger prize.

For Davis, that prize is not superstardom, but the means to make a living as an actor while enjoying Vermont's vaunted quality of life. Striking the balance is a challenge, to say the least. In general, Davis says, "Living in Hardwick is pretty simple. It's a good speed." But when a stage or screen role is announced in a larger market, such as Boston, Davis finds that "It's like a whole-day thing just to spend five minutes in an audition, and damn near impossible if you have a day job."

Luckily for the Champlain production, Davis is between day jobs at the moment. He had been working at Mac's Market in Stowe until gas prices made the commute from Hardwick a pricey proposition. (If only Walter Lee Younger could exercise such fiscal responsibility.)

Davis and his wife Shari Cornish moved to Vermont in late summer 2004 and took up residence in an old family home, along with Cornish's sister. That move marked the end of a long professional journey for Davis — from his undergraduate days in Kansas City to acting stints in the Twin Cities and, for a spell in the late 1990s, Los Angeles. Davis enjoyed some success in L.A. when he landed a small speaking part in actor Bill Paxton's directorial debut, Frailty. But the pace — and cost — of Left Coast living sent Davis and Cornish packing to Asheville, North Carolina. There Davis made a Vermont acting connection when he appeared in a North Carolina Stage Company production of Midwives, Vermont playwright Dana Yeaton's stage adaptation of Vermont author Chris Bohjalian's novel.

EDGAR DAVIS

FEATURED ARTIST

GEMINI TRAPEZE
International stars from Cirque du Soleil

MEMORIAL AUDITORIUM
10:30 pm

FIRST NIGHT™ BURLINGTON 2007
A CELEBRATION YOU'LL REMEMBER!

Buttons & Tickets AVAILABLE NOW!
Adult $12 • Child $6
Show Tickets $2
Visit our website to order!

FIRST NIGHT BURLINGTON 2007
A CELEBRATION YOU'LL REMEMBER!

PEPSI NIST

Book review: Still as Death by Sarah Stewart Taylor

by Margot Harrison (12/06/06)...

In the meantime,

Poem

by Nadell Fishman (12/06/06)...

Lords of the Strings

Vermont guitar makers Dan DeMars and Creston Lea are in tune with the times

by Casey Rea (12/06/06)...

Reading Between the Lines

From "I Spy" to stage: A local theater troupe gets personal

by Erik Esckilsen (12/06/06)...

Going Homeless

How one Vermont mother lost and learned everything

by Kevin O'Connor (11/29/06)...

Net Gains

Hoop dreams come true as the Frost Heaves hold court in Barre

by Ken Picard (11/29/06)...

Plop Swap

A fledgling Vermont company strikes a deal between ag and the environment

by Kevin J. Kelley (11/29/06)...

Heaven Can't Wait

Theater preview: 27 Heaven

by Casey Rea (11/29/06)...

Believe It or Not

Inside the wild and wacky world of Wikipedia

by Cathy Resmer (11/29/06)...

An I For an Eye

Encouraging victims and offenders to talk about crime — with each other

by Cathy Resmer (11/22/06)...

Heat Rave

Laurie David gets the public hot and bothered about global warming

by Ken Picard (11/22/06)...

Barn Again

A Williston furniture company gives new purpose to old boards

by Kevin J. Kelley (11/22/06)...

Dinner Decorum

Turkey-table talk with etiquette master Peter Post by Suzanne Podhaizer (11/22/06)...

Disengaged

A prospective bride ponders the modern wedding

by Brooke Hunter (11/22/06)...

Bringing in the Firewood

While that role had no bearing on his subsequent move north, Davis seems well acclimated to his adoptive state. A live-and-let-live outlook comes through as he tells the story of his life and career. In conversation, Davis is inclined to focus less on the challenges of being black in a racially homogenous state than on the nationwide struggle to make art and a living. He's friendly and direct one moment, hunched over in stocky contemplation the next. Get him going on the difference between good and bad theater, and he's full of opinions.

For one thing, Davis is wary of what he considers to be pat interpretations and methods. That's evident in his unconventional approach to the portrayal of Walter Lee Younger. "People like to talk about the racial aspect of the play and the social aspect of the play; people go to those obvious relationships," Davis says. "There's something people don't like to address, and that's the biological aspect of being a guy. I think there are some things that are very hard-wired in the male psyche."

One of them, he explains, is the innate male need to be the provider, which Walter Lee clearly can't manage. And Walter Lee's business scheme hardly earns him respect. As he laments, "Man says to his woman, 'I've got a dream.' His woman says, 'Eat your eggs.'" Davis elaborates: "You have black women who, because of their experience, aren't as dependent on males. So they are stronger, and the need for men or a man's place gets diminished."

While Davis believes that his male conditioning helps him understand Walter Lee on one level, he considers Hansberry's script the most important place to look for motivation. "I am a firm believer in not embellishing," he says. "In other words, speak the words as they are written. . . I'm not going to rewrite her play. I'm not going to make it fit my view of the world."

In other words, Davis eschews the contemporary method of dredging up father issues and sundry psychological wounds to animate a character. Instead, he respects the sanctity of the script. It's a strategy reinforced in his "bible," playwright David Mamet's True and False, an extended essay entreating actors to serve the text above all.

Kent Stephens, one of Davis' first acting teachers at the Kansas City Art Institute, set him on a course away from turning character study into thinly veiled therapy. "He told us, right off the bat, 'We're not going to do any exercises,'" Davis remembers. "But as you go from production to production, you will be able to survive the bullshit out there masquerading as theater. It's not about you at all. It's really not about the actor."

Davis took Stephens' advice to heart in performance-art classes. There he says he endured criticism for being "so 19th century" when he chose to tell stories through performance rather than present the kind of "repellent" work then in vogue. "I got sick of going to performances and seeing these people spew all their venom," he says. "I don't want to sit there and listen to you scream, 'Fuck you, Dad' for 10 minutes."

Davis' distaste for pedantic forms of theater was sown much earlier, though — in his Pentecostal upbringing as the son of what he calls a "fire and brimstone" preacher. Davis recalls the working-class congregants who summoned a kind of false strength from the church's "emotional manipulations." He says the experience enhanced his sensitivity to a character like Walter Lee, who occupies a subservient station in life.

As no-nonsense as his acting style may be, Davis is known for his affable, lighthearted manner, onstage and off. "He's got a great sense of humor . . . Edgar can make things very funny," says Unadilla Artistic Director Bill Blachly, recalling his Fugard performances. "He sees the irony and humor in ways that not everybody does." In A Raisin in the Sun, Davis skillfully leavens with wit many moments in the otherwise tense, dramatic play.

Did Davis' dream get "deferred" — as the Langston Hughes poem puts it — somewhere between Kansas City and the Northeast Kingdom? He readily admits he'd welcome another round of residual checks, such as those he collected for a while after appearing in a TV ad for the Old Country Buffet restaurant chain. But he's content to be in Hardwick for now. Davis says he isn't making the same mistake he sees Walter Lee Younger making day after day, night after night — being "envious and frustrated" at his prospects. "I'm happy because I know more than I did when I was younger," Davis explains. "Fewer things bother me. There's less conflict in my life. The only benefit of age is wisdom — but that's enough."

atboy

Hi. Looking for a new born soul? the nice guy that still exists! Without snow its time to get creative...

BROWSE...

Women Seeking Men
Women seeking Women
Men seeking Women
Men seeking Men
I Spy

Ads by Google

A Raisin In The Sun

Huge selection of A Raisin In The Sun items.

eBay.com

Playscripts, Inc.

Read lengthy script samples of new plays for free, before you order!

www.playscripts.com

Van Gogh Tours

Bike Tours in Vermont Stowe, Woodstock, Lake Champlain

vangoghtours.com

Plays for Teens/Kids

Fun stage plays for young people. Read them right here for free!

www.emmettloverde.com

Poem

by Stanford Pritchard (11/22/06)...

Little Feet

It's a dwarf hamster — what's not to love?

by Casey Rea (11/15/06)...

< previous article | next article >

calendar | features | classes | columns | music | food | film | art | letters | store

ALL RIGHTS RESERVED © SEVEN DAYS 1995-2006 | PO BOX 1164, BURLINGTON, VT 05402-1164 | 802.864.5684 | PRIVACY POLICY

SITE DESIGNED AND HOSTED BY  SILICONDAIRY